Making Connections

Background

Connections within the military community are the base of a resilient military. Resources, like those offered on installations through the Military and Family Support Centers or online through Military OneSource, build bridges and connect service members and military family members in all stages of life and career to the information and support they need.

Highlights

Service members and military family members can find connections through the following:

- The Family Readiness System – The system offers connections to the local community, state and national resources.
- Military and Family Support Centers – Social connections, installation fun and local support are all accessible through this network.
- Military OneSource – Service members and eligible family members can access a network of support through social media connections, helpful articles, tips and resources related to military life, confidential non-medical counseling options and more.
- The New Parent Support Program – This installation-based program offers support during the transition to parenthood.
- Career and education programs – The Spouse Education and Career Opportunities program, Hiring our Heroes events, mentoring options, and installation-based employment and volunteer opportunities can connect military spouses, children and transitioning service members to new opportunities.
- Family readiness groups, ombudsmen and key spouse programs – A mix of volunteers and civilian employees ensure military families have the information they need to thrive, especially during times of transition and separation.
