

Military OneSource Video — [What is FAP?]

Program title: Family Advocacy Program

Video transcript:

[Narrator] When it comes to you and your family feeling safe and secure, you have many lines of support, including the Family Advocacy Program.

Do you need to strengthen your relationships, create healthier surroundings for your kids, protect your family?

The Family Advocacy Program has a great lineup of services to help you [Additional text on screen lists: New Parent Support Program, Prenatal Classes, Parenting Classes, Relationship Counseling, Abuse & Education Awareness, Educational Resources, Intake, Risk and Safety Assessments, Safety Planning, Clinical Assessments, Case Management, Referral to Local Resources], for example, getting your family off to a good start.

If you're expecting, adopting or fostering, or already have young children through age three, our New Parent Support Program can provide lots of free support and services.

Want to give your relationship a lift? Our confidential services and resources for individuals and couples can help you set boundaries to manage stress, improve lines of communication, build healthier connections and strengthen positive behaviors with educational groups and classes, risk assessment and counseling.

And if harmful situations occur at home, remember, you are not alone. We can work together to create a safety plan, file a report, access treatment, whatever you need to see your way through.

We will listen to you, point you to information so you can make the best decision for yourself, and line up the support you want as you need it.

Being safe and secure is a basic human need. Whenever you want backup, we're on the line. That's the mission of the Family Advocacy Program.

Your safety and well-being is our bottom line. There's a program on every military installation where families are assigned.

Find yours at installations.militaryonesource.mil.